

Seymour DuBow

Seymour DuBow has been an impartial hearing officer since 2001 on special education disputes in the District of Columbia and an adjunct professor of law at the Washington College of Law, American University. He has taught special education law at the Washington College of Law since 1998. He was Legal Director of the National Center for Law and Deafness at Gallaudet University from 1975-1995. He was involved with the development of communication issues in the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and with development and passage of the Television Decoder Circuitry Act. He was also involved with several disability cases before the U.S. Supreme Court. He was a clinical supervisor at the Washington College of Law and trainer for the Key Bridge Foundation training professional mediators on the ADA. He has written extensively on disability issues. He is a graduate of Northwestern University and George Washington University Law School.